Miss Coghlan gives Alice the charm of bright humor and pertness, relieving as much as possible her silly heroics. In a play of some serious interest, Miss Coghlan doubt would be an impressive young actress. Macart's dog and monkey circus, in this week's vaudeville at the Grand, the stage with monkeys, and they furnish fun spontaneously. The routine of tricks is not unusual, but the accidents and improvisations of the monkeys are full of diversion. The act is put on well, though Macart has used Canned Goods Will Be Higher | the whip so much the dogs much the dogs the Up-to-date animal trainers, especially the European ones, seek to produce the effect of their pets liking their work.

A man employed by Reno and Richards, acrobatic comedians, is comic in much the same way as Macart's monkeys. He appears at the end of the act and feigns stupidity. He is fat and clumsy, and his make-up has a piggish look. He is used with some street boys for a jumping-back off the sidewalk in front of the theater. He causes a great deal of laughter and that is a result one of his principals strives for Theodore Smith and Miss Jennie Fuller offer the same musical instruments that they have had for several seasons. Smith imitates various things with a string attached to a tin can and a violin bow; the two play on graduated cans and several styles gongs, and Miss Smith plays the Italian harp and sings. She has a beautiful instrument and plays it very well, but her voice is not excellent. The act has refinement and the mucicians play with accuracy and good phrasing, but their melodies are old. Smith, too, persists in talking, which he does in a way to make the audience laugh at him when he intends his announcements seriously. The act has been prominent in vaudeville for years, but it is going backward now. the rings. Their tricks are complex and new, they dress handsomely and move gracefully. Theirs is, in fact, the most valuable contribution to the bill, though it is not conspicuously advertised. Press Eldridge has a great deal of pres tige on the basis that he sings parodies skillfully. So he does, but his material is unfit for any but low variety houses. He is one of the monologuists that will do anything for money. He has jokes with which minstrel comedians nauseated the intelligent part of the public twenty-five years ago. It is stupid and vulgar come-dians of his sort that are holding vaudeville back and must be put out of the way bepart of theatrical patronage.

Miss Winona Winter, a clever and modest young girl, returns with her father, Banks Winter, in their old sketch, and she gives her familiar imitations of Jessie Couthoui, Anna Held and a ventriloquist. She is too competent for this sort of thing. She should lengthen her gowns and strike out for herself with original caricatures and light songs. She is a favorite in the vaudeville theaters and gets as much applause as almost any other performer in the business. The sketch is silly and pointless. Banks Winter continues to sit on the stage during the time his daughter is at He also attempts to sing. His voice has a range of three notes and he

Miss Atalie Claire, who once had a voice and displayed it to advantage in light opera, sings now with her tones so covered that they sound as through a sieve. She makes a good appearance and imposingly uses the spot-light.

A vaudeville house n Cleveland, the Empire, has an orchestra of eighteen pieces, including cello and choe, directed by a real conductor. The house is patronized by the smart Clevelanders and has the best acts in vaudeville. From comes the Empire show, which is headed by James J. Corbett. The Grand's orchestra consists of seven instruments and Mr. Cooley, the conductor, has to play one of them. The little band produces not music, but a din. It ruins a good singing turn. If the orchestra were of sufficient size and the conductor were given a chance to show what he could do with a baton it would not be necessary for comedians to work overtime while the stage is being set behind the No. 1 drop. A great many persons would be attracted to the house on account of the orchestral music. This is enjoyed in other cities and there is no sufficient reason why Indianapolis should not have it. It is up to the Grand to make some changes that will put it

The old story of virtue triumphing over villainy, in the melodrama "For Love and Honor," is played by a company at the Park Theater. It is made entertaining by being acted by a capable company. The story is told in five acts. It represents the low work of a man of means trying to win the affections of the daughter of his business partner. The paymaster for the company succeeds in winning the girl's love and marries her. The couple is married hurriedly, as the young husband goes to war. The scorned lover, with the aid of a female blackmailer and other tools, goes to the young wife and tells her that her husband is also the husband of another She renounces him, but will not renounce her love. The husband, who has heard of his actions, returns as a colonel of the army. The wife thinks him dead and he does not disclose his identity. LITTLE GIRLS' IMMORAL DANCE

FORCED TO EXHIBIT THEMSELVES AGAINST THEIR WILL.

Progress of the Trial in the Criminal Court-Other Cases in the Local Courts.

The trial of William Caldwell and Belle Caldwell, accused of the murder of Daniel Sullivan on Oct. 12, was begun in the Criminal Court yesterday. Pleas of not guilty were entered by the defendants through their attorneys, Frank McCray and Charles McGroarty. The work of selecting a jury was of short duration. By 11 o'clock the following-named men had been chosen as jurors and were sworn in: Jacob J. Lowes, Edward J. Starkey, Samuel Pfendler, William C. Miles, Albert Parsley, David L. Shipley, Richard Haley, Lincoln Foltz, Charles Ringer, Robert Irvin, J. N. Downey and Tilford Antrim.

Prosecutor Ruckelshaus, in the opening statement for the prosecution, related the facts of the murder. From the story it seems that after a drunken orgy in the house of William Caldwell, at 2511 Lawrence street, Oak Hill, near Brightwood, in which Daniel Sullivan, the murdered man, and Nathan Hunter, Edward Campbell and A. W. Williams, with Caldwell's wife, The immediate cause of the row seems to have been the actions of one of the men in assaulting a little twelve-year-old girl who was in the house. The little girl, Edith Gant, 540 East New York street, and Orie Liberty street, had been dancing for the amusement of the men, it is said. They were forced to dance many minutes in an immoral fashion, both against their will and understanding, and were at the house, it is claimed by the defense, to attend a

OBJECTS OF COARSE JOKES. After finishing the dancing in the front part of the house, the children went into many coarse jokes there by the drunken men and woman. When something octhe light was blown out, and a free-for-all fight ensued, in which Mrs. Coldwell wielded a heavy cane, he husband a spade or some other instrument of the sort, and the other men their fists. In the fight Sullivan was struck twice, and after a hasty exchange of blows the man and woman, Caldwell and his wife, locked the doors and went inside The gang dispersed, and Edward Camp-bell went to Sullivar's home, at 2003 Katherine street, and, not finding Sullivan there, went back to the Caldwell home, accompanied by Sullivan's wife. On the way back they found Caldwell leaning over Sullivan, who was lying on a vacant lot in a half-conscious condition. He was picked up, his wounds dressed and the police notified. All of the men who were at the orgie were arrested and held in the jail. Sullivan was taken to the City Hospital, and

The testimony for the prosecution at the trial yesterday was that of Nathan Hunter, one of the men implicated in the affray which ended in the murder; Edward Campbell, another one of the crowd, and Arthur Williams, the man who played the piano at the Caldwell home on the night of the murder. Hunter, in his testimony, said that after the men had been locked in the jail Caldwell approached him with the suggestion that if all of the men implicated in the crime would get together, employ the same attorney and each testify the same as the other, there would be no conviction and no one could be held for the crime. He suggested that the story be made up that Sullivan met his death from an accidental fall.

MURDERED MAN'S WIDOW. Another witness was Mrs. Daniel Sullivan, the widow of the murdered man. She told the jury that she is the mother of three children and lives on Katherine and a man of small stature and one not likely to provoke a fight with Caldwell. Dr. Brayton, son of the coronor, was a witness and said he had made an anterior examination of Sullivan's body and found two wounds. One of them, on the frontal region of the head, was caused by a blunt instrument, which had cut the scalp. The other wound, on the back of the head, caused a depression of the skull, an anterior fracture and, undoubtedly, the death of Sullivan. Detectives Lancaster and Dugan and Bicycle Patrolmen Trimpe and Lowe were the State's other witnesses, and their testimony ended shortly before 5

Frank McCray, chief counsel for the defense, made the opening argument for his in which he sought to show that the killing of Sullivan was accidental, unpremeditated, and the blows causing Sullivan's death inflicted in self-defense by Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell. During the trial, Mrs. Caldwell, twentynine years old, sat in the courtroom and complacently showed her interest in the trial. She did not show any nervousness and neither did her husband, a man thirtysix years of age, neatly dressed and unconcerned in appearance. The evidence will all have been submitted to-day and after the arguments to-morrow the case will go to

GRAND JURY INVESTIGATION.

Ghoul Cases, Coal Exchange and Alleged Election Frauds.

Rufus Cantrell, ghoul; Chauncey Manning, detective, and William T. Long, acting detective, were before the grand jury yesterday with additional evidence for the consideration of the jury in the ghoul investigation. What their testimony was is unknown, but it is understood that the sheriff will soon have several arrests to make on grave-robbing charges. That former is becoming apparent. On the way up to the grand jury room he stated in the elevator that he was "gittin' tired of this talking before the grand jury.' The jury yesterday heard the testimony of several suburban independent coal dealers and finished their investigation of the charges against the members of the Indianapolis Coal Exchange. Unless information is vounteered by people who know of some illegality there will be nothing more submitted to the jury. Deputy Prosecutor Charles Benedict said yesterday that if anything new is heard of an attempt will be made to bring it before the jury, but that he knew of nothing in prospect. The investigation of the alleged election frauds. the vote buying in the Haughville precinct, was also finished yesterday. The testimony of three of the young men whose votes were bought and of other persons who knew of the deal was heard. It is expected that the jury will repor to-morrow or Thursday and with its report will be the indictments against the coal men and violators of the election laws, if any are returned against them. The grand jury has been in continuous session for five weeks, and although thoroughly tired and wont out Deputy Prosecutor Benedict says he is still ready to investigate any viola-tions of the law that may be reported to it.

Mrs. Minturn Sues for Divorce. Joseph A. Minturn, formerly a member of the State Senate from this county and a candidate for the nomination for joint senator last summer, was sued by his wife, Leona A. Minturn, for divorce yesterday. Mr. and Mrs. Minturn were married Oct. 25, 1884. Mrs. Minturn alleges that her hus-band has been cruel and neglectful in his treatment of her. In addition to a divorce the court is asked to grant the plaintiff the custody and control of the children-Mary Catherine Minturn, age seventeen; Herbert A., thirteen; Lucy G., ten, and Esther, five. She asks the court to allow her a sufficient monthly allowance for the support of herself and children.

Claims He Was Damaged.

Herman H. Ahlers was sued for $1,000 damages yesterday by William R. Adkins as a result of a land deal between the two in 1894. Adkins alleged that he paid Ahlers $800 for 160 acres of land in Humphreys county, Tenenssee, in August, 1894, but when he tried to claim his land he found that it was held and owned by Thomas Coffey and G. W. Miller. He demanded satisfaction from Ahlers and a deed to the property, but avers that his claim has never been satisfied, he has not received a deed and that he has been damaged to the extent of $1,000.

John Selchrist, Jr., Sues.

John Selchrist, jr., a coremaker who lives at 1439 West Market street, sued his wife Maud for a divorce yesterday, after having been married to her only since August. Selchrist avers that his wife has been separated from him for some time and has treated him cruelly and also been guilty of several breaches of their marriage contract.

James L. Barnett, receiver of the Globe pattern works, submitted his final report in Judge Allen in the Circuit Court yesterday and the receivership was ordered closed.

A New Complication in the Pesthouse Location Matter. A new development in the Wayne township pesthouse site excitement was made yesterday when Mr. Miller, the real-estate agent who procured the option on the site, presented a deed to Mayor Bookwalter. It had been understood that the owner of the property would not give a deed after she found it was to be used for a pesthouse lieved, if the city refuses to accept the deed, an attempt will be made to hold it responsible for the real-estate commission.
